The European Union appears to have turned a corner on the political crisis that began with the French and Dutch referenda on the European Constitutional Treaty. The new institutional reform treaty is less ambitious and yet perhaps more successful as a result. But what does this entail about the future of European integration? The question is not just a matter of domestic concern. As the U.S. presidential elections gather momentum, it is clear that the transatlantic relationship is headed for a substantial change. European countries and the European Union must be poised to take advantage of the possibilities that a new U.S. administration has to offer. At the same time, any new U.S. administration will need to know what to expect from the European Union. The purpose of this one-day workshop is to set a baseline for expectations both inside Europe and across the Atlantic. By implication, we will discuss not just the fate of the European Union but also the future of the transatlantic relationship.

The Workshop

The workshop brings together high-level academics from both sides of the Atlantic responsible for directing the world’s largest professional organization focused on the study of European integration, The European Union Studies Association (EUSA). Its deliberations will help to shape the debate about the future of the EU and U.S.–EU relations.

The Rationale

The European Union appears to have turned a corner on the political crisis that began with the French and Dutch referenda on the European Constitutional Treaty. The new institutional reform treaty is less ambitious and yet perhaps more successful as a result. But what does this entail about the future of European integration? The question is not just a matter of domestic concern. As the U.S. presidential elections gather momentum, it is clear that the transatlantic relationship is headed for a substantial change. European countries and the European Union must be poised to take advantage of the possibilities that a new U.S. administration has to offer. At the same time, any new U.S. administration will need to know what to expect from the European Union. The purpose of this one-day workshop is to set a baseline for expectations both inside Europe and across the Atlantic. By implication, we will discuss not just the fate of the European Union but also the future of the transatlantic relationship.

Participants Include

VINCENT DELLA SALA
University of Trento

JONATHAN HORPEN
Johns Hopkins University SAIS Bologna Center, and London School of Economics

LIESBET HOOGHE
University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and Vrije Universiteit, Amsterdam

KENNETH H. KELLER
Johns Hopkins University SAIS Bologna Center

DANIEL KELEMEN
Rutgers University, New Jersey

DANIEL KEOHANE
The European Union Institute for Security Studies, Paris

NICOLAS JAKBO
Johns Hopkins University SAIS Bologna Center, and Sciences Po, Paris

ERIK JONES
Johns Hopkins University SAIS Bologna Center

PIERO IGNAZI
University of Bologna

DAVID NATALI
University of Bologna

ANGELA LIBERATORE
European Commission

SONIA LUCARELLI
University of Bologna

CRAIG PARSONS
University of Oregon

GIANFRANCO PASQUINO
University of Bologna

RICCARDO ROVELLI
University of Bologna

FRANK SCHIMMELPENNING
Center for Comparative and International Studies, ETH, Swiss Federal Institute of Technology, Zurich

HORST SIEBERT
Johns Hopkins University SAIS Bologna Center

MICHAEL STÜRMER
Friedrich-Alexander-Universität, Erlangen - Nürnberg and Johns Hopkins University SAIS Bologna Center

AMY VERDUN
University of Victoria, Canada

VERA NEGRI ZAMAGNI
University of Bologna

Johns Hopkins University SAIS Bologna Center
via Belmeloro 11 • 40126 Bologna • Tel. +39 051 29 17 811 • www.jhubc.it